ABSTRACT

Children will learn the concept of verb tense by hearing and imitating. Most children start out by generalizing the past tense rules they hear in some regular verbs for application to irregular verbs. It means that listening may not be an adequate learning method for children. With practicing, memorizing, reading and doing activities, children can learn irregular verb tenses. Games are a fun and effective way to practice with irregular verb tenses. Based on that reasons, in this job training report I try to solve the problem by offering UniCard; new teaching strategy.

UniCard is an education game that can help children in learning English irregular verbs. UniCard is believed can give the positive effect and joyful learning to the students in memorizing English irregular verbs. My goal is to show UniCard as a new education game to increase children's motivation in learning English. In this job training report, I will describe the characteristics of children as learners, the benefits of using UniCard in teaching and learning English irregular verbs, the problems in the using of UniCard and the solution of those problems. I do the observation and interviewing to do this research. My research shows that games are very useful and can be used to develop students' language ability. Therefore, I recommend teachers to try some games that may be useful to their students in order to enhance students' proficiency, to help them meet their goals, and at least to try new things in teaching.