ABSTRACT

The report entitled Transformational of The relative clause into noun phrase in booklet developing organizational talent for effective understanding deals with transformation of the relative clause into the noun phrase in presentation material that the author was made in communicate the purpose and the content of the booklet "Developing Organizational Talent". The transformation was done in order to make effective understanding for the audience during the presentation. In the material, there are seven relative clauses which were transformed into the noun phrase. All of them can be transformed into the noun phrase.

According to the theory from A.J Thomson and A.V. Martin in book "a practical English Grammar", the noun phrase can be modified by pre modifier including determiner, adjective, adjective phrase and also noun. Some pre modifier such us adjective, adjective phrase, and noun also can be the complement in relative clause that followed the connector who followed by the auxiliary. When the adjective, adjective phrase, and noun indicates to add information that is restrictive to the head.

The result of this report indicates that the relative clause, to make different form, transform into the noun phrase without losing the meaning. The transform is used in order to make effective understanding as the mentor advice. Specifically, the relative clause to indicate the meaning has different form that is the noun phrase.
