This research is called The Patterrn of Communication With the Child's Parents a Skinhead. To find out about communication patterns, the study is to be seen from the process and obstacle communication.

The approach used in this study is qualitative in descriptive study. The selection of informants is using purposive sampling technique. The techniques of data collection used are in-depth interviews, observations, documentation, literature studies, and online data searching. Meanwhile, the techniques of data analysis used are reduction of data, collection of data, representation of data, and drawing of conclusion.

In Parents and Skinhead Children communication process in Bandung City, we found such day-to-day habits as advising, reprimanding, discussing and chatting, and extending orders to children. Obstacles found in this study are semantic like the difference that, mechanic like a time, distance and through electronic media, and psychology as a egos, of course between parents with a skinhead.

Based on the results of the study, it might be concluded that the pattern of communication is shaped as a result of continuously, repeatedly communication process. The process taking placing is, commonly, indirectly communication or via phone media; for examples, loudly speaking, softly advising, threatening, reprimanding (Verbal: in words and high notation. Nonverbal: gesture, stare, point toward).

Researcher's suggestion is that Parents and Skinhead Children should establish directly communication, not using electronic media or handphone, to make it effective. So, effective communication is directly communication.
