CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

1.1 Background

Language is a tool for implementing social cognition (Semin, 2000). According the statement, the writer can conclude that language is a tool of communication which always used by human for interacts with each other. The writer's thoughts also supported by Thomas M. Holtgraves and Yoshihisa Kashima in their book titled "Language, Meaning, and Social Cognition" which told that "People use language to communicate to one another (and to researchers) their attributions, perceptions". This definition stressed the social functions of language and the fact that humans used it to express themselves, describe something, and manipulate objects in their environment. Not only the languages which have those special functions, the terminology also have function to describe something too. We know that the term is 'a word or group of words designating something, especially in a particular field', That is why, the writer did this research due to give some information about that.

There are many terms which the writer tries to understand, because plenty of them are came from different languages and cannot be translated. It is because there are some provisions that applied to not change those terms.

Depart from this case, the writer wants to discuss about the terms which often be used in the writing of tour schedule and reveal several terms which cannot be translated into the other language because those ‘special’ terms are global terms which usable in domestic or overseas.

there are some provisions that applied to not change those terms. Depart from this case, the writer wants to discuss about the terms which often be used in the writing of tour schedule and reveal several terms which cannot be translated into the other language because those ‘special’ terms are global terms which usable in domestic or overseas.

1.2 Scope

The problem that the writer wants to discuss in this report is about the number of terms which often be used in the writing of tour schedule and reveal several terms which cannot be translated into the other languages.

1.3 Objectives

There some objective in making this report, they are:

1. to accomplish job training course in 7^{th} semester,
2. to explain the job description

1.4 Significant of Knowledge

There are two advantages that the writer gets from this research. First is theoretically, and the other is practically. In theoretically, the writer can learning and understanding the meaning of terminology which appeared inside tour schedule. Practically, the writer can use the specific terms when he write the tour schedule as his job-training.

1.5 Framework of the Theory

"Theories imply a systematic ordering of ideas about the phenomena of our field of inquiry and are usually of two kinds. One is concerned with understanding, the other with explanation and prediction" (Børje Holmber, 2006). Depart from Børje statements, the writer can conclude that a research needs a theory for support the writer's idea and make a research more perceivable by the reader. That is why the writer took the theory of Sager, in order to describe the report about the terms more specifically.

In his theory, Sager said;

"The fact that humbler occupations like nursing, book-keeping and cooking and even hobbies also involve special areas of human interest and therefore also require and indeed have own special language is much less often acknowledge. Since practically every human activity can be attributed to one subject or another, all language could be split into so many subject languages and the word "special" would be superfluous. (Sager, 1980)"

The integrated and verified statements of Sager which explained the definition of terminology is totally correspond with the writer's research about the terminology. It is because, in the writing of tour schedule, they also have an own special languages, just like the statement above told that "special areas of human interest have own special language".

1.6 Research Method

The method which used in writing of this job training report is descriptive method. The writer will describe the information which contained in this research, begins with explanation about the job, also the several materials which present in the job field. The whole data are collected from the bundle of record, program, and daily note of the writer since work in Travel Agent, PT. Dago Wisata Internasional Tour & Travel
