CHAPTER IV

CONCLUSIONS AND SUGGESTIONS

4.1 Conclusions

From the discussion in chapter 3, the writer can give some conclusion:

1. From the two data in chapter 3, the paragraph is developed deductively and inductively, which the first data is deductive and the second data is deductive. The research article writer did it to make a variation in writing a paragraph.
2. The cohesion devices that used are repetition, substitution, reference, and conjunction, which are found on those data. That is because the research article writer wants to make a good paragraph by develop it using the cohesion devices so that the paragraph holds together as one and easy to be read and understood.

4.2 Suggestions

Based on this paper, the writer knows that this paper is still too far from perfection and completeness, so the writer gives some suggestions for the next research about paragraph development.

1. Analyse the paragraph based on the characteristic of the paragraph content or the function of the paragraph itself to make the paragraph more develops by means collecting the more theories about paragraph development.
2. Analyse about the unity of the paragraph, which is seen from the main idea in the paragraph to make the main idea does not more than one, because the good paragraph only has one main idea.
